WATER DURING PREGNANCY AND WEANING

In the very first life phases, water has a leading role. During the development of the embryo and of the fetus, all the vital functions happen in a watery environment. Therefore the quality of the water is essential for this complex and delicate process.

During the first months of life, we are very sensitive to pollutants. Pediatricians suggest to totally avoid nitrates and to always use pure and healthy water, which must be without bacteria and dangerous substances such as heavy metals, arsenic and other chemicals like chlorine, which can be dangerous particularly for children.

An high level of inorganic mineral salts (total dissolved solids) is not good as well. This is because our body can't assimilate salts from water if they are inorganic.
